hawk Golf Club's invitation tournament to day by beating Sherrill Sherman of Yahnundasis by 3 up and 2 to play in the thirty-six hole final round. Only a fortnight ago Schlefflin was in golfing disgrace, for he failed to qualify for the club championship, but to-night he is the popular hero, for his clubmates feel considerable satisfaction over the fact that a home golfer finished on top.

performance stands out as one of the most notable of the year, for he conquered Max Marston in the first match sound and Sherrill Sherman in the last. Both of whom were good enough to reach the semi-final round in the national championship at Detroit a year ago. Add to that his victory over Charles T. Lansing, the medallist, yesterday and the fact that he never before played in anything bigger than a club tournament and Schiefflin acquires a reputation as a golfing wonder that should endure even if he never wins another cup.

Sherman Loses Skill.

The final match this morning began the singular fashlon, for the first eight holes were halved, neither yielding an inch to the other. Finally when they reached the ninth green Schiefflin holed a putt for a 3 and broke the spell. He was out in 38, even par. On the inward journey Sherman played poor golf and practically lost the match before he reactically lost the match before he recommended. There was not a star in the sky, and the inky canopy above was as black and as deep as the rolling seas of Buzzards Bay.

On the inward journey Sherman played poor golf and practically lost the match before he went in for luncheon. The round ended with Schiefflin 4 up. The cards, morning round:

The afternoon round was a pretty struggle, Sherman striving desperately to regain the lost ground, and at one time almost succeeding. He made a hard job harder by losing the first hole, but after that played good and steady golf, which enabled him to cut down Schiefsin's big lead. When they reached the thirteenth Schiefflin was only 1 up, and it looked as if Sherman might pull through after all. Two good shots put him close to the green, but his chip shot was too hard and the ball ran over the green. Schiefflin won the hole and the danger point had been passed.

Sherman could no better than to halve the next two holes and it was all over when he missed a short putt for a half on the sloping and tricky sixteenth

ON MANY CRICKET CREASES.

An exciting finish characterized the Metrocolitan Learne game between Manhattan and Columbia Oval yesterday at the Parade Grounds at Prospect Park. Manhattan made a good start, and after totalling 135 for the loss of eight wickets sent the opponents in to bat. L. Miller bowled with deadly effect, and the game resolved itself into the question of whether Miller could get the side out before the time limit. When G. Marlone, the last man on the Columbia Oval team, went to bat there were eight minutes of playing time left, but R. Comacho and Maglone stubbornly resisted all efforts to dislodge them and played out time. The result was a draw—Manhattan, 135 for eight wickets; Columbia
Oval, 70 for nine wickets.

Brooklyn easily defeated Kings County in the Metropolitan Lengue game at Prospect Park, The Brooklyns scored 113 and Kings County 42.
